Young generation is the hope and the beneficiary for the nation's development in the future. However nowadays, the increase of participation among students in Higher Education Institutions (HIE) in various social problems are very devastating. The need for serious efforts in helping students to improve the internal strength to form a strong personality and understanding of social responsibility as a leader or Caliph is not only to themselves but also for the society. This study focuses on students who live off-campus since they are not bound by the rules of the residential colleges, yet they are only bound by the regulations of the university. Besides, they are beyond the management’s control of the university. Therefore, students have the tendency to be influenced by negative elements from outside. Through the preliminary findings, studies found that students are not able to understand, practice and carry out responsibility as a Caliph in terms of self-management; relationship with the Creator; social relationship with housemate; and environmental management leadership. Therefore, this article discusses the process of Development of Leadership Transformation Module of Off-Campus Students (TKDPLK) by looking at the module’s content validity. This module is developed by integrating spiritual intelligence knowledge and giving awareness of social responsibility.
